The problem: Vulnerable people in quarantine does not have access to food because they cannot work outside.

46% of the global population lives with less than $5.5 a day* making them vulnerable in economical terms. According to that proportion, it could be estimated that almost 1.2 billion of vulnerable people is in lockdown now.

The economy of vulnerable people

In normal times

▶ Most of them have informal jobs like selling goods on the street.

▶ Formal jobs belong to low tech companies, it is done in presence.

▶ They have no saving capacity.

▶ They buy their food in daily basis, according to the daily income.

During lockdown

▶ They have no acces to the places where their work is done.

▶ Restrinction of the use of crowded spaces.

▶ Need of self sustainability.

▶ Remain indoors requires purchasing food for a long period of time.

The solution: Connecting vulnerable people with food resources and provisioning food banks.
